Introduction

András Dudith's library

To the memory of Otto Walde (1879-1963)

I

Andreas Dudith (1533-1589) was a prominent and intriguingly complex figure of Hungarian and even European late Humanism. He was one of the few people who played an important part not only in the politics but also in the Church organisation of his age and he was a well-known scholar, too. In the end, feeling disillusioned with both the ecclesiastical and the secular offices he had held - his alienation from his former ideals is well illustrated by the facts that he got married twice and felt attracted to antitrinitarianism - he spent the last years of his life in exile, devoting himself entirely to scholarship, reading and books. While he played an active part in politics and held a high office in the Church, the spiritual leaders of Europe thought him worthy of their regard - he met a number of important people at the Council of Trent - and he was in regular correspondence with a great number of contemporary theologians, scholars and leading statesmen.

Pierre Costil, in his standard monograph on Dudith,¹ collected and published a great deal of factual information on the scholarly bishop of Pécs, with special reference to his wide intellectual horizon, scholarly work and wide-ranging international network of contacts including, among others, such friends and acquaintances as Theodore de Bèze, Aldus Manutius, Heinrich Bullinger, Josias Simler and even Justus Lipsius. While studying the subject, Costil happened to come across some printed books and manuscripts which „strayed” from Dudith's collection. All the same, when discussing Dudith's library, even Costil had to rely on Otto Walde's publication², a record of Dudith's books that had been taken to Sweden. The above-mentioned publications, though not aiming at full coverage, as far as our present subject goes, have contributed much to our knowledge of Andreas Dudith's book collection. Apart from these works - if the list of books, owned by the provost of Esztergom, bishop of Vác, John August Sbardellati (Dudith)³, seized in Padova, in 1535, and said to be bequeathed to Andreas Dudith, were left out of consideration - we would have very little to start from, when looking for the origins of Dudith's ideas, except for the six books that belonged to him and have been found in Hungarian libraries, quite recently. It is no accident that we are using the conditional, because - luckily for us - Gedeon Borsa, relying on the information provided about Dudith by Otto Walde, the Uppsala historian of publishing, went to Sweden to take a closer look at the material that may have belonged to Dudith's sometime collection and is held at present in Swedish libraries. His main objective was that, as the editor of the RMNy (the bibliography of old Hungarian printed books), he should fill in some gaps in Vol. I. of this bibliography. Yet his aims were not restricted to the recording of old Hungarica. It was he who raised the idea that the catalogue of Dudith's library should be reconstructed, and we are indebted to him for this suggestion. A scholarship of four months, granted by the Hungarian

Ministry of Cultural Affairs, allowed us to carry out, on the basis of the material published by Otto Walde, a partial and tentative reconstruction of the catalogue of one of the major late Humanistic libraries owned by a Hungarian. Our most important source was Walde's substantial catalogue of provenance; most of the factual information published in the present book have been drawn from his work, have been based on his extensive studies.⁴ Walde's investigations went far beyond a survey of the books that had somehow found their way to Sweden, he extended the range of his studies, among others, to books formerly owned by Dudith and later (at the time when Walde conducted his survey) held by a number of foreign libraries, and he conveyed a lot of useful information about them. His catalogue was our standard, when we carried out our own investigations; it was by following his indications of provenance that we succeeded in finding a substantial number of Dudith's books and could actually examine them at first hand. Of course, this refers only to the locations, where we had the opportunity to go - to Dresden, Lund, Rome, Stockholm, Strängnäs, Uppsala, Västerås - and to the books accessible to us. Several of the books could no longer be found in the catalogues of the libraries indicated by Walde. A number of books were destroyed or lost - particularly in Dresden during World War II -, in some cases, the volume shown to us was not the same edition as that described by Walde, or it was another copy of the same edition, and the time available to us was so short, that we could not rectify the error. Of course, we had no opportunity to see every book listed by Walde and held at present in libraries all over Europe; in fact, we have not seen a substantial number of these books and, in these instances, we based our entries on Walde's catalogue; in other cases, e.g. for the books held in Kiel or Wrocław, we are indebted to Ms. Klára Erdei and Mr. Lech Szczuczki, respectively, for their kind help.

It should be mentioned, with due respect for achievement, that without Otto Walde's catalogue of provenance - a work to which we could only add a few bibliographical descriptions of titles hidden in miscellaneous collections of works bound together or some inscriptions in Dudith's hand, not recorded by Walde, but included by us in the notes on the copy - we should still have no idea of what Dudith's collection was really like. We should have to inspect and examine thousands of books, hidden in the depths of library stacks, to find out whether the peculiarities of Dudith's books - i.e. provenance note, dedication, mottoes, D-number on the edge of the book or marginal notes - can be detected in them. If all these clues were missing, the bindings would have to be examined closely, as these might also help to identify the volumes of Dudith's collection. And with good reason, because it was by paying attention to this criteria, peculiar to the books owned by Dudith, that Walde was able to collect his material from several European libraries. Unfortunately, the identification of the books we could not examine at first hand, gave us much trouble. Walde's descriptions of the books are rather short, recording no more than the name of the person supposed to be the author, a few words of the title, the place of publication, and, in most cases, the year of publication, and the format of the book. His aim had by no means been the reconstruction of the Bibliotheca Dudithiana, he travelled all over Europe as an archivist entrusted with the task of finding archival material on the history of Sweden. As Dudith, in his last years, took a keen interest in the non-conformist movements of his age, and this kind of literature was liable to come out under false imprints or under false names, in some cases, we needed help from colleagues and friends specialized in these matters.

Still, short as Walde's descriptions may be, and slight and uncertain as the facts conveyed by them might be, our synthesis of the fate of Dudith's library has mostly been based on Walde's findings. During his student years and his later travels, then in his seclusion from the world in Paskow and Breslau (Wrocław), Dudith seems to have collected a well-ordered, extensive library, arranged and listed by format and by the source of acquisition. The scope of his collection ranged from the classics, through theological works by Catholic and Protestant authors as well as by authors reputed to be heretics, to works on history and jurisprudence, mathematics, astronomy and medicine. The collection held only a small number of works of pure imaginative literature. During his years of seclusion from the world, collecting and purchasing scientific literature, and medical books, in particular, seems to have become particularly important for him.

The number of volumes held in his library can best be assessed on the basis of the so-called Dudith-number, a kind of shelf-mark written on the upper edge of the pages. This numbering - a separate set of numbers for each size - is indicative of the fact that the books were accessioned and even of how the books were placed on the shelves; it seems to convey that the books were not in an upright position, but were laid horizontally on top of one another, with the number on the upper edge facing outwards. The highest numbers in the series are: 664 for the folio size, 972 for the quarto, 2125 for the octavo. (Octavo is the smallest size in the collection.) We tend to agree with Walde's estimation, based on these numbers, amounting to about four thousand volumes. It should be mentioned, however, that Walde's estimation has referred to the number of volumes and not to the number of titles, which must have been much larger. Our list shows that most of the volumes were miscellaneous collections, made up of a number of titles, bound together either on publication or later. Consequently, Andreas Dudith's book collection must have held about five to six thousand works, as far as our present knowledge goes. Another conclusion, based on the gaps in our index of D-numbers, may be that the collection was scattered so widely and so much of it disappeared, that it is very hard to find among the surviving items volumes that were placed next to each other in the original collection. It is also evident from our list that the titles known to us account for somewhat less than ten per cent of Dudith's original library. That is the reason why we have thought is important to stress, in the half-title of the present volume, that our work is only a partial reconstruction of Dudith's collection, the reader can expect to find here no more than that.

The Dudith library was considered to be an important collection at the time. Not only the number of volumes, but also its contents were thought to be impressive. Even the small fraction that has survived from it substantiates this claim. It was the importance of the collection that induced its owner to contemplate bequeathing his collection to the University of Wittenberg, where he also planned to set up a college - the Collegium Dudithiana - for young fellow countrymen eager to study. His sudden death, however, prevented him from achieving this lofty goal.

From his death to 1609 his collection was kept - under rather adverse circumstances - in Breslau (Wrocław). His widow must have sold it in 1609 or 1610, and it was then that most of the books - though not the entire collection - were acquired by Dietrichstein, for his famous library, housed at Nicolsburg. By the time when Dudith's books were sold, Dietrichstein's library had become an important collection. It had been established by Adam Dietrichstein (1527-1590) - cardinal of Olmutz, a leading figure of the Counter-Reformation - owner of Nicolsburg, and was further developed by Franz Dietrichstein. Besides Dudith's books, the collections previously owned by Jacob Conrad Praetorius von Perlenberg, the Back von Leopoldsdorf family, Giacomo Malipiero and Hieronymus Picinardus - „Scholasticus Olomucensis” - but whose library was housed in Venice also came into the possession of the Dietrichstein family, in due course. Apart from Dudith's books, the Dietrichstein library held some further items of interest, connected with Hungary. These have been listed in the second Appendix to the present book, because - as Hungarica - they may have been part of Dudith's collection, too.

Another sizeable part of Andreas Dudith's collection was taken to the library of Prince Friedrich August of Dresden. Several volumes are still there, but it was also in this library that the former Dudith collection suffered the greatest loss. Several volumes that had been still there when Walde had visited the library were either destroyed during World War II or, which is more fortunate, have been „simply” lost, allowing us to hope that they may later surface.

A few volumes from the Dudith library - on the evidence of the years of the sales 1610, 1614, 1615 and the provenance notes S. A. T. I. S.- came into the possession of Georg Serack (Sherhackl) von Hartenfels. The books left over by the two important collectors who had bought most of Dudith's collection were presumably sold by the family, little by little and not in bulk, as the above dates allow us to conclude.

It is well-nigh impossible to trace the fortunes of each surviving volume of the library. The books included in Dietrichstein's library certainly suffered the same fate as the famous library itself. That is to say, when the Swedish army commander, Lennart Torstensson, the ally of Prince George Rákóczi of Transylvania, won a victory over the Habsburg army at Jankau, in 1645, then set out to occupy Vienna, he was unable to cross the Danube - to tell the truth, the Transylvanian auxiliary troops failed to turn up in time - , so he retreated to Nicolsburg, at the frontier of Austria. The book collection of the Dietrichstein family formed an important part of the rich booty. The books were put into barrels, and sent to Sweden. They were merged with the library of another famous book collector, Queen Christina of Sweden, and were put in charge of her librarian, Isak Vossius. The volumes which, as duplicates or triplicates, were not needed by the Royal Library were distributed among various Swedish libraries, and even to Swedish private collections.

Thus the path(s) followed by Dudith's books can be reconstructed as follows:

1. Dudith (Breslau) - Dietrichstein (Nicolsburg) - Christina of Sweden (Stockholm) - then sent to Uppsala, Lund, Strängnäs, Västerås, Skara, Vaxjö, Linköping, Magnus de la Gardie, Vossius (Leiden), Copenhagen etc.
2. Dudith (Breslau) - Friedrich August of Dresden (Dresden) - some of these books were scattered or lost.
3. Dudith (Breslau) - (S. A. T. I. S.)[?] - Friedrich August of Dresden or Dietrichstein - Christina of Sweden. This path, however, cannot be traced with certainty, because it is impossible to tell, whether a book got to Dietrichstein from Hartenfels or the other way round, or whether it was part of Dietrichstein's library or came to Sweden through another channel, especially when the book-plate, common to Dietrichstein's books, has been missing from it. Still, the absence of the book-plate cannot be regarded as conclusive proof, because, in several cases, the book-plates have been missing from volumes that were proved with absolute certainty to have been part of the Nicolsburg library. In spite of the lingering doubt, there is good reason to believe that the above path may have been followed by several of Dudith's books, because Walde found that, though both Dietrichstein and Christina's names were missing from a number of books, these books probably shared the fate of the books having provenance notes, i.e. those owned by the above persons without doubt. The book collection of the scholarly-minded Christina of Sweden, taken to Rome after her abdication, was bequeathed to Cardinal Azzolini, her heir general. This collection, particularly rich in codices, was later sold by the Cardinal to Pope Alexander VIII.

Some books from Dudith's library, including those held by Hungarian libraries - with the exception of a volume in the Library of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, which came to library by way of Dresden - may presumably have been given away by Dudith and may never have got to his library in Breslau (Wrocław).

As mentioned before, as far as we know, only about ten per cent of the Dudith collection, which may originally have contained about five to six thousand titles, has been listed so far. The problem is: Can the list of books previously owned by Dudith be further extended and completed? In our opinion, it certainly can.

Although it cannot be proved consecutively, it has been suggested by the specialist literature on the subject for a long time now that the books of his uncle may have passed into Dudith's possession. For the benefit of those wanting to study the subject further, John August Dudith's inventory of estate, or rather a part of it, listing his books, has been included in the present volume as Appendix 1.

Of course, Dudith's own works must have formed part of his library, too. We also know that - according to the custom of his age - he gave away some of his works.

Works by Cardinal Reginald Pole must have been included in Dudith's collection, as well, because he was the Cardinal's secretary and the translator of his biography.

In connection with Dudith's library, Costil mentioned a number of books, copies of works written by Dudith's fellow scholars and friends, with dedicatory inscriptions. The autograph dedications lead us to the conclusion that several of his contemporaries would send their works to Dudith.

Dudith's library held not only printed books but also a good many manuscripts. Usually he himself copied the books that were important to him or were his favourites. He is said to have made three copies of Cicero's works. Of the manuscripts owned by Dudith - mostly copies made by himself - Costil mentioned the following⁵:

„Saint Jacques l'apôtre (attrib.) Liturgia; Denys d'Halinasse, de Thucydidis historia iudicium, de admiranda vi in elocutione Demosthenis, de Isaeo, de Dinarcho, ad Ammaeum epistola prima, ad Pompeium epistola, Ars rhetorica (apocryphe), de compositione verborum; anonymus, Commentarius vetus in quattuor Evangelia; pseudo-Longin, de Sublimo genere dicendi; Diodore de Sicile, Bibliotheca historica, livres XIII-XV; Appien, Hannibalis historia, livre VII de l'Historia Romana; Théophraste, de Calore et frigore; Plutarque, Quaestiones conviviales, livre IV; Ptolémée, Opus quadripartitum; Proclus, Paraphrasis du même ouvrage; Diophante, Arithmetica; Ptolémée, Tractatus ineditus en 1585; Geminus, Elementa Astronomiae; Pappus, Collectiones mathematicae; Saint Grégoire de Nysse, Commentarius in Cantica Cantorum; Marcus d'Éphèse, de Processione Spiritus Sancti Apollonius Dyscole, de Collatione verborum.”

As far as we know, at present authentic Dudith manuscripts can be found in Stockholm, Rome, Leyden and Wolfenbüttel.

Thanks to Costil, the manuscript copy made by Dudith of Mordrevius's Sylva - „MDLXVIII Cracoviae descripsit Andreas Dudithius” - and taken to Leyden by Vossius, as well as the manuscripts in the Bibliotheca Vaticana, in Rome, marked Reg. gr. 127 - „Exscripsit Andr. Dudith Carcouiae (? Cracouiae) manu sua,” „1570. Mart. 20.” - and Reg. lat. 1115 - „Andr. Dudith de Orehowicze etc. Καψ βίξρά 1569” have already been known to us. It was also

Costil, who provided the information that Diophanti's Arithmetics, another Dudith manuscript, was to be found in Wolfenbüttel (HAB Gudiani Graeci 4188.)⁶

A 196-page manuscript, entitled „Consilia et casus juridici secundum statua Hungarica, Bohemica. - de rebus variis”, held in the Manuscript Section of the Royal Library of Stockholm, marked B. 726, may also have been Dudith's. Only the second part of the manuscript - 45 pages of text -, written in a clear, legible, running hand, and the year M.D. LXIII, on the last page, can be identified as being in Dudith's handwriting. On compiling this second part, Dudith's intention was to make a sort of chronology. He jotted down, month by month, the major events, the dates of birth of poets, authors, kings, army commanders (e.g. of King Matthias of Hungary, John Hunyadi, Erasmus, Luther) and the dates of some historic events. He registered likewise the dates of Biblical events and holidays for each month. At the end, he gave a survey of various systems of calendar (annus lunaris, annus solaris, annus aegyptus, annus magnus, annus Julianus).

As with the printed books, he copied out the keywords of each paragraph in the margins - names and concepts with Greek or Latin annotations. We can also find sections of text in Greek and Latin verse inserted in the manuscript, in places. (It is worth mentioning that this folio-size manuscript was also given a D-number (D-670), which points to the fact that the manuscripts were not held apart from the books in Dudith's library, as a separate collection.)

It has been Bussow's catalogue of the Nicolsburg library that helped us most to increase the number of titles proved to have been owned by Dudith. Of course, of the titles listed in the catalogue, only those having some kind of connection with Hungary - a Hungarian author, subject, place of publication etc. - may be said to have anything to do with Dudith's library. As in some of these books Dudith's handwriting is still preserved - e.g. in a work by Ferenc (Francis) David and in another by Peter Méliusz Juhász - we can state with certainty that, in these instances, the books figuring on Bussow's list were actually Dudith's.⁷

Two books, now in Sweden, can also be supposed to have belonged to Dudith. An alternative suggestion is that the author may have tried to send the volumes inscribed to Theodore de Bèze with Dudith's help to the dedicatee. For some reason, these volumes seem not to have reached their destination and may probably have found their way to Dietrichstein's library, instead, together with Dudith's books. They are now held in the library of the cathedral of Västerås⁸.

II

Apart from registering the fact that one of the most famous fifteenth-century libraries, the Bibliotheca Corviniana was in Buda, the old Hungarian capital city, international library history takes little or no notice of Hungary. To tell the truth, Hungarian specialists writing on the subject have not shown much willingness, either, to remedy this state of affairs; in fact, mourning over the destruction of King Matthias's library by the Ottoman Turks, they have preferred to exaggerate the woeful state of book production and collection in sixteenth-century Hungary. As far as publishing is concerned, they are certainly right. As to bookselling and bookdealing, we cannot tell, as no extensive and carefully coordinated survey has been conducted as yet of the sources providing Hungary with books and of the channels through which books could have arrived there. On the other hand, the reading of books is quite another matter. The findings of the last ten years proved consecutively that no Hungarian social stratum or religious denomination was below the standard of their European counterparts, where reading was concerned. Even while Hungary was fighting for survival, almost without break for a hundred and fifty years, there was no shortage of erudite and well-read Hungarians. Of the learned prelates of the sixteenth century, the best known were Miklós Oláh, Miklós Telegdy and Zakariás Mossóczi⁹. The book-learning of the Hungarian towns (Sopron, Kassa (present day Kosice), the mining towns or the citizen communities of Transylvania)¹⁰ compare well with any European „civitas”. Hungarian Humanist scholars did not fall behind the Western Humanist elite, either. Hans Dernschwam’s book collection in Banská Bystrica (Besztercebánya)¹¹, János Zsámboki’s collection in Vienna (Wien)¹², though not accessible to Hungarians beyond a limited circle of intellectuals, have to be taken into consideration, if we want to make a fair assessment of the Hungarian situation. Andreas Dudith’s library, on a par with the two above-mentioned collections, adds some further details to the picture, making it more complex rather than completing it, because the owner of this library lived through most his life far from his native country. He kept in touch through correspondence¹³, exchange of books and by watching with keen interest the political and ecclesiastical developments in Hungary.

The development of Dudith’s collection was subject to his changing interests, extended over a wide range. The present list, though only a fragment of his original library, allows us to form some useful conclusions on how he made his acquisitions and organized his collection.

The provenance notes make it quite clear that Dudith usually bought new books. He did not inherit his books, nor did he purchase small bequests. Only a few possessors’ names can be seen in his former books, and most of the names were inscribed there not by previous owners, but by those who had bought the collection after the death of the scholarly bishop.

It is also obvious from our list that Dudith had preferences for certain publishers. The book production of Basle forms an important part of his collection. Dudith was a regular customer of Johannes Oporinus and Petrus Perna, and his preference was not accidental. Almost all the adherents of the non-conformist intellectual movements of the age frequented the Swiss town. The University of Basle used to offer lecturerships even to persons who had been expelled from other academic institutions, accused of heresy. Of the printers, especially the above-mentioned two published the works of non-conformist authors.

In addition to the tolerance of Basle for intellectual and religious non-conformity, Dudith had other reasons for giving the book production of this town pride of place in his purchases. The greatest achievements of Humanist scholarship came out under the auspices of these publishers (and two others, Sebastianus Henricpetri and Johannes Frobenius), whose production was in competition with the publications issued by the printing presses of Paris. The bulk of Dudith's purchases from the Basle printers were Biblical philology and the works of the Church Fathers; he also bought several of the classics in critical editions printed in Basle.

Venice is represented in our list as a North Italian town, where works of philosophy, mathematics, astronomy and medicine were published. Antwerp (and Christoph Plantin, in particular) is the publisher of the classics in editions of a very high standard, and the sponsor of medicine (Vesalius). The printing presses of the Estienne family in Paris and Geneva are shown to be competing with success with the Basle workshops in the domain of Humanist scholarship (critical editions of patristic literature, the medieval Doctors of the Church and fifteenth-century Humanists), while the German printing presses (Wechel of Frankfort on the Main and Cholinus Maternus of Cologne, in particular) are presented as the agents of the great religious controversy of the age, through their editions, of a very high standard, of the theological disputes and the polemical literature.

It is also emerging from this list of 340 books that Dudith preferred to purchase first editions. He bought corrected and augmented second or later editions alone; the virtually unchanged editions that carried on their title-page a statement, 'new edition' by the publisher, out of commercial considerations, were absent from his library.

Some subjects having a particular interest for the owner were represented in the collection by several works. Such subjects were e.g. the attacks on Aristotle as an authority on logic and dialectic or on Galen in medicine. He had several works on the Council of Trent, which is not surprising, because it is well known that Dudith attended and took part in the work of the Council where the principles of a reform to the Catholic Church were laid down.

Of the theological problems, those concerning the Holy Trinity, the human and divine nature of Jesus Christ and the Holy Communion engaged Dudith's attention most, as well as the activity of the Jesuit order, with special reference to the replies given by Jesuit authors to the controversial issues raised by Catholic theology.

We would argue that András Dudith the book collector was a unique phenomenon in sixteenth-century Hungary, even among the Hungarian bibliophiles. For the conditions under which East European owners of libraries lived and collected books, differed widely from those of the European book collectors, say, in Paris or Basle or elsewhere, who had access to several bookshops in the towns, who had the possibility of choosing among a number of publishers, who could examine the books at first hand, before making a purchase. These conditions allowed them to develop their collection themselves, without having recourse to middlemen. This is the reason why the European private libraries were less wide-ranging and their holdings more homogeneous than, say, the Hungarian libraries. The scholar, the noble lord, the prelate, the clergyman or the town-dwelling tradesman living in Hungary was to some extent subject to the literary taste of the middleman - bookseller, travelling friar, student etc. - , let alone the fact that he had almost no access to advance information on the books available to him. Consequently, these people spent their money on books offered or recommended to them by others, books that came to their notice - more often than not - accidentally, books they had no opportunity to see before purchasing them. This led to a great diversity in the collections, a great variety of books were held, over a wide range of subjects. We cannot find a single specialist library in the strict sense of the term in Hungary, in this period. The poor sources of book acquisition were to blame for this state of affairs, in the first place.

Andreas Dudith travelled widely during most of his life. He visited several European cities and towns, made contacts with a great number of people, in many places and kept in touch with them later, too. For this reason, it was much easier for him to find the information or the books he needed, he could buy books directly in bookshops or he had at his service persons who had a clear idea of his interests and could advise him or recommend books to him accordingly. In addition to this - especially towards the end of his life - he acted as unofficial reader after publication; several authors sent him their newly published works to ask for his opinion. Most of these authors are regarded as non-conformists by modern specialist literature, or at least as being in heated dispute with the non-conformists.

The Bibliotheca Dudithiana, as reflected by the list of its partial reconstruction, combines the virtues of the two above-mentioned types of collection: its range is not too narrow, while the intellectual profile of the owner is emerging from it. This is the library of an East European Humanist - or rather as we would say today: the library of an East European citizen of Europe.

III

Andreas Dudith was a conscious reader, his treatment and interpretation of the texts he was reading showed him to be sometimes a student gathering information, sometimes a scholarly philologist. He gave himself away by his habit of underlining and copying out sections of text, and inscribing marginal notes, annotations, corrections and additions in the books.

I shall discuss here some of his characteristic reading habits, in order that we may understand how he was impressed by scholarly and literary works, how he interiorized literary experience, what characterized him as reader and user of books.

Dudith left his mark on most of his books that have hitherto come to light: he inscribed his motto, his name (or provenance note), he underlined some sections of text and made entries in the margins. The provenance note has almost always been the same text; still, sometimes reference is made to the owner's present circumstances and to how the owner got to acquire the book. The text of the motto is sometimes in Latin, sometimes in Greek, and sometimes in both languages (Bene qui latuit, bene vixit, or some variant of this phrase, or the Greek equivalent: Καψ βιξίρα)

Most of the entries were written in red ink, Dudith seems to have liked this kind of ink. Occasionally, he also used brown ink and, on rare occasions, only in a few cases, the traces of pencil marks are discernible in his books. The annotations inscribed in inks of different colour in the same book seem to indicate that he read it more than once. The marginal notes, written with great care, in a clear, legible hand, lead us to the conclusion that he followed the time-honoured methods of the acquisition of knowledge and learning. He underlined a particular word of the text or made a mark next to it, a small drawing - this may sometimes be an index finger -, he used the margins for recapitulation and summing up, copying out sections of text for emphasis, references to sources, polemics, comments, references to other places in the text of the book or to other works concerning the same subject. Occasionally full particulars were given in the references, even page numbers were quoted. Another type of marginal note, perhaps the most important of all, and it occurs quite often, was the correction of a given section of text in the margins and an assessment of the contents.

All the above visual methods - the copying out of the names of persons, places and diseases - served for memorizing names, concepts and facts, for fixing them in the memory, then, later, they helped to recall the acquired knowledge, and, incidentally, to find the marked places. For the succeeding generation -, for us, among others - they testify to Dudith's extensive knowledge and wide intellectual horizon. These annotations can sometimes prove that Dudith was familiar with books that have not hitherto been listed as part of his collection. Therefore, the marginal notes need to be studied in detail, but they cannot be properly dealt with, unless specialists in several domains combine their forces.

The marginal notes have been written in either Greek or Latin, only a few notes are in Hungarian. The reason why Hungarian notes are so rare may be that Dudith only made annotations in Hungarian in books that were in Hungarian, too. Nevertheless, the Hungarian entries are highly important, because they prove, beyond doubt, that Dudith was an active speaker and user of the Hungarian language.

Dudith had some other peculiarities, of lesser importance, in using his books. He preferred to write on the blank pages at the beginning of the book, while he was not so keen to use the blank pages at the end, for recording the information he needed. On the first pages he put mostly page numbers of importance, information concerning the author, and sections of text copied out from the book. He often wrote on the illustration, he preferred the frontispiece; when deciding where to inscribe the provenance note, he usually placed the writing around the picture or in the picture and he often coloured the woodcuts in red ink.

The annotation may allow us to suppose a relationship between its copiousness and Dudith's opinion of the work. Several volumes are copiously annotated at the beginning, while later the marginals are progressively thinning out and they completely disappear in the end. In these cases, it is obvious that Dudith lost his interest in the book more and more, as he progressed, and, in the end, he was no longer interested in it at all. In other cases, the indications point to consciously selective reading. E.g. in a substantial volume or a miscellaneous collection of various titles bound together only certain chapters, books or titles show the signs of purposeful use. If Dudith had a work in two copies in his library - especially if they were part of a miscellaneous collection bound together by the publisher and not by the owner - one copy was bound to be left unread, or Dudith made a mark on it to show that he was aware that the copy was a duplicate.

The circumstances under which the book was read, even the reader's state of mind can also be guessed sometimes. Even after centuries of vicissitudes, wars and transportation there are such telling indications as an arrow-shaped bookmark - certainly made by the owner - or the remains of a pressed flower between the yellow, crumbling folio pages.

Our present edition of the book list cannot undertake the additional task of recording all the marginal notes - of a philological, theological, historical, astronomical, medical etc. nature, expressing agreement, repeating opinions or engaging in polemic. As already mentioned above, the full study and treatment of the marginal notes would necessitate the cooperation of various well-qualified specialists - and would take much time. An interdisciplinary group would have to be set up to evaluate the information contained in these marginals and the nature of the learning emerging from them, which may help to give our idea of Dudith's mentality a firm basis in facts. Our aim in publishing the list has been to call the attention of the specialists to the books and the marginal notes to be found in them, to the existence of these rich sources of information and to their location. The task of dealing with the information and putting it to good use in various specialties, of piecing together from this scattered material Dudith's cast of mind as a jigsaw puzzle and of drawing the necessary conclusions, will be theirs.

Only the marginal notes that have a Hungarian connection or have a bearing on the history of ideas or some polemic and informative comments thought by us to be peculiar to Dudith's turn of mind, have been put into this book. Nevertheless, we took special care, and it was our principal objective, to publish - within the limits of the possible - the material essential for Dudith specialists to complete Dudith's portrait. This material contains references to personal relationships and biographical details, and first-hand information on details known only to Dudith. This kind of material occurs only occasionally, all the same, we could find some remarks, where Dudith was reflecting upon himself, referring to his circumstances, including facts that no one else could know, except he himself, e.g. when he ends the dedication of his work entitled „De cometarum significatione”, published in Basle in 1579 with the words: „Ex solitudine mea Pascouiana, apud Morauros, pridie Kal. Mart. M. D. LXXIIX”.

By way of conclusion, we wish to express our thanks to those who assisted our work. The librarians in the foreign libraries visited by us in search of Dudith's books in Dresden, Lund, Rome-Vatican City, Stockholm, Strängnäs, and Västerås showed unending patience and were helpful in many other ways, contributing thereby to the success of our work. We are indebted to Mr. Gedeon Borsa (Budapest), Mr. Sándor Dörnyei (Budapest), Ms. Mária Dugántsy (Uppsala), Mr. Per Ekström (Lund), Ms. Klára Erdei (Kiel), Mr. Tibor Grüll (Sopron), Ms. Katalin S. Note on the copy: Walde attributed this book to Dudith because of the marginalia. He had good reason for it, as the Greek and Latin notes, the underlined sections of text, the glosses on words, sections of the text taken out of their context and copied for emphasis are all Dudith's autograph inscriptions, made with the intention to correct the text. On p. 63 he translated a strophe into Latin. There are no marginal notes following p. 85.

Note on the copy: On Cardanus's portrait, on the verso of the title-page, Dudith wrote in red ink: „1571 Romam abductus ob pietatem.” Except for Vol. 18, this item has been copiously annotated. On p.1121, which is the first page of vol. X, entitled De mirabilis, the following text has been underlined: „Franciscum Somor Neapoli.” At the bottom of the page, from the line beginning „Spargebat chartas in mensa ...” there is a marginal note: „quidam Cremonen. fuit hic Crac. 1572, qui haec e mirabilia faciebat. nomine Scotus is post Rudol. Caes. seruiuit.” On p. 1124, inscribed above the first paragraph, another note can be seen: „Quelli che fanno le bagatelle.” Ibidem, in the margin, the note „vidj” refers to the text: „Fingunt alij uulnera adeo ad unum”.

Location: Stockholm KB.

Note on the copy: This item has been annotated in detail, but only to the verso of the first page of the work written against Péter Károlyi. The end-paper carries the words „Polon V”. On the half-title leaf, there are Greek and Latin texts in Dudith's handwriting: „Ezech. XX In status patrum vestrorum nolite ambulare e iudicia eorum nolite custodire, neq. polluamini in idolis eorum ego dominus Deus Vr. Ambulate in semitis meis, e custodite iudicia mea, atq. facite ea.” Ferenc Dávid added an autograph correction to the reply to Objection 16, on the verso of page Xiiij: „Ez okaért vallom, hogy [erased: à Christus], [marginal note:] az Isten.” The only correction made by Dudith in Hungarian can be found next to the reply to Objection 16, on the recto of page Xiiij: „Ackor kedig Salamonnac à Christus, az Istenec fia, még nem adattatot volt [in the margin, in Dudith's hand: „sem Istenec iobiára nem vlt wolt.”] sem mind azoknac, kic az ó Testamentomba éltene.” Referring to the text: „köuetec az ő Wroknac neuét visselek és hordozzác”, which is part of the reply given to Objection 2, on the recto of page Niiij, in the margin, there is a note in Dudith's hand: „Imp. Franka. Spagna. Portugallo. polonia etc. imo equis eorum nomina imponuntur, à quib. forte donatur; vt apud me Imper. rex. Zrini. Forgach Bochkai Vsaly etc. equorum nomina erant, à donatoris.” The reply to Objection 17, on the verso of Y, called forth the following reflection from Dudith: „Miképpen mind à Papistác [in Dudith's hand: Sabelliusszal] vallyác”. Objection 3, on the verso of Gg says: „Miert hogy keresztelő Sz. Ianos Christus Wrunckal nem szolt: Mert az ő predicállassanak kezdetiben ottan meg öletet”. With reference to this, Dudith commented in the margin: „hazugsag” (It is a lie). - In Part 2, Dudith made several handwritten entries in the margins of the dedicatory address and on the first two pages of the text.

Note on the copy: This is the first title in a miscellaneous collection of works bound together and has been copiously annotated.- Our efforts to identify it have not been successful. Though another work by the same author, entitled Chrysopassus, might fit the above description, having the same subject: Lecta est illa praedestinationibus materia..., no mention has been made of a folio edition in either VD 16 or elsewhere. All the same, the second title of this miscellaneous collection was actually published in a folio edition and is still extant, thus the mention of a folio format could not be Walde's mistake.

Note on the copy: The first title in this miscellaneous collection of works bound together has been copiously annotated. Most of Dudith's comments refer to the dedicatory lines written by Andreas Marcolius. Next to the beginning of the dedication, he inscribed: „Laudes verissimae Falloppij.” Where Andreas Marcolius had mentioned Hieronymus Mercurialis's name, Dudith commented on it: „nunc Patauij professor est Medicinae primo loco.” He added to his dedicatory lines: „Laudes h. libri. Laudationem funebrem habuit Jo. Samoscius Sarius magnus Regis Poloniae Cancellarius et regni Capitaneus meus olim Parisijs contubernalis, et amiciss. usq. ad electionem in Poloniae Regem Maximil. Caes. cuius ego tum orator eram in illo regno. 1575.” At the end of the dedication, he made the following remark: „propria haec fuit Falloppij professio, in qua plane princeps habebatur etiam ab aemulis praeterea anatomicus erat plane singularis. interfui cum multa cadauera dissecare atq. explicatur structuram humani corporis mira eloquentia.” In the first part of Vol. I, - „de thermalibus aquis atque metallis tractatus” - there are no marginal notes; while several notes have been added to „de metallis, seu fossilibus tractatus”.

Coll. 2. FALLOPPIO, Gabriele (Falloppius):

Libelli duo, alter de ulceribus, alter de tumoribus praeter maturam. Venetiae, 1563. Donatus Bertellus. 4^o - Durling 1438

Coll. 2. ALEXANDRINUS, Julius

Antargenterica pro Galeno. Venetiis, 1552. Lucas Antonius Junta. 4^o - STC. Ital.

Note on the copy: There are no marginal notes in this item. - In this work, Alexandrinus took a stand against Giovanni Argenterio's attack on Galenos (Argenterius: Varia opera de re medica. Florentinae, 1550. Laurentius Torrentinus. 4^o). It was Reiner Solenander who replied to Alexandrinus (Apologia qua Julio Alexandrino respondetur pro Argenterio. Florentiae, 1556. s. typ. 4^o). In response, Alexandrinus brought out his Antargentericorum suorum defensio (Venetiae, 1564. Bologninus Zalterius. 4^o). Of the two works, the latter was the better known. Dudith must have been well versed in the debate. We may conclude this from the fact that he had in his possession this item, the first in a long line of books to come out on the subject, and a book hard to come by, even at the time.

Guarinus(?)] 4^o - Moeckli p. 78.; Pollard-Redgrave 13844; OSzK H 552

Note on the copy: Edinburgh as the place of publication is a false imprint. The French version of this work, on which the Latin version was based, had also been published by Stoer, under the imprint: „A Cologne, par Hierome Berthulphe” (VD 16 H 5208). Pollard-Redgrave, however, gives Basle as the place of publication of the only quarto edition cited in it. They know of two other editions, both published in London in 1573, by Henry Bynne, but these were in octavo, (Pollard-Redgrave 13845, and 13846).

Disputationes contra Ieusitas. - De lectione Historiarum recte instituenda. - De Periodis Imperiorum. [Wittenbergae, 1563]

Note on the copy: Copiously annotated. - The entire description seems questionable. It seems that works by more than one author have been combined to form an entry: David CHYTRAEUS: De lectione historiarum recte instituenda ... Witebergae, 1563, Johannes Crato. 8^o (VD 16 C 2644 or Idem: Argentinae, 1563, Christianus Mylius. 8^o: VD 16 C 2643, and published at the same place, in 1565: VD 16 C 2645) might be identified with the second title. However, the author had no other works corresponding to the remaining two titles of the collection. Perhaps the „De periodis imperiorum” might also be by this author: David CHYTRAEUS: De tribus nostrae aetatis Caesaribus Augustis. Carolo V. Ferdinando I. Maximiliano II. oratione ... Wittebergae, 1583. s. typ. 8^o (VD 16 C 2647), or idem: Argentorati, 1587, Carolus Kieffer. 8^o (VD 16 C 2648), but we could not find any clues to the identity of either the first title, „Disputatio contra Iesuitas”.

Note on the copy: The interpolations on the title-pages of this miscellaneous collection of works bound together have been made in Dudith's hand. There are no marginal notes in this book.

Coll. 2. BALBANI, Niccolo (Balbanus)-VIRETO, Pietro (Viretus)

Ad cuiusdam Antoniani [Posseuinj] professione iesuitae, Errores et mendacia de missa, eiusque sacrificio ad Lugdunenses, Apologia. s. l. 1564. s. typ. 8^o - BMPD Rés. 353.881.

Note on the copy: The word „Posseuinj” has been inserted by Dudith in red ink. My efforts to identify the author and the edition with certainty have not been successful. In any case, this is a polemical treatise, a reply to Possevino's question posed in a work published in Lyons: Trattato del santiss. sacrificio dell' altare detto messa. Nel quale per la santa parole di Dio, et per i testimonii degli Apostoli, et della chiesa primitiva si mostra che il Signor Giesu Christo institui la Messa, et gli Apostoli la celebrarono. In Lione, Appresso Michele Giova, 1563. in 8^o (Baudrier II. p. 101-102) - The IndAur enters under no. 111.742 Niccolo Balbani's reply: Trattato primo delle risposte fatte ad un libretto di Messer Antonio Possevino della Messa. (Genève), 1564. Oliviero Fordrino. 8^o. Therefore, it does not seem to us a far-fetched conclusion that the authors of this item, an anonymous work may have been those cited by Possevino on the title-page of his reply to a latter tract: Risposta à Pietro Vireto, à Nicolao Balbani et à due altri heretici i quali hanno scritto contra il Trattato della Messa di M. Ant. Possevino. In Avignone, per Pietro Rosso, 1566. 16^o - Sommervogel VI. Col. 1065.

Coll. 3. OTHO, Johannes:

Provenance note: Below the title, in red ink, in Dudith's hand: „antapologiam huius lib. gla in Biblioth. tua inter lib. in 8^o. n. 613.”

Coll. 5. VITTORI, Mariano (Marianus Reatinus):

De sacramento confessionis, seu poenitentiae, historia ... contra haereticos Lutheranos ... Romae, 1562. Paulus Manutius. 8^o - BN; Adams V 669; STC Ital.

Provenance note: Andr. Dudith etc. Consil. Caes. etc.

Note on the copy: On the title-page, in red ink, in Dudith's hand, there is the following: „fuius una in Anglia, sequati Cardin. Polum 1554 Vir et doctrina, et pietate insignis erat.”

Coll. 6. GUAERINUS, Antonius:

Antonii Guaerinii Epistola ad Franc. Balduinum apostatam Ecebolium de Christiani iurisconsulti officio. s. l. 1564. s. typ. 8^o - BSB; BN

Note on the copy: Above the word „Antonii” Dudith put, in red ink: „Fr. Hotomannj dr ee.”, and that is why Walde came to the conclusion that Franciscus Hotomannus was the author.

Coll. 7. BONN, Hermann (Bonnus):

Note on the copy: This item has been copiously annotated. Only a few notes are quoted here, by way of example: 13. Gaspare Velicovio - „Wilkowski Medic. ex Ariano Catholic.”; 108. Blandrata - „Geneua profugus, exusto Serueto”; 110. Iacobus, qui se Palaeologus vocabat - „Germam ex Palatinatu <...> Glyrium se voc. Germ. Vehe”; At the bottom of the page, where the text refers to Paleologus, we can find another comment: ἡνunc Romae igni adiudicavit Grigor XIII PP. ad palam allegatus < ...> donatur ei vita, certis conditionibus, in custodia seruatur; tandem 18 dies ante Pf. obitum decollatur. 1585.”; 131. Prima Thesis, id est blasphemia - „Franc. Davidis”; 137. Franciscum Davidem mortem - „Blandr. adstipul. Fr. David.”; 138. At the top of the page: „Fr. Davidis impietas”; Fructus novi Euangelij - „Claudiopol. Judaizant”; Italo Samosatenici - „Faust Sozzin”; 257. Erant legati - „de Andr. Dudith etc.”; 258. Dudith's comment on the fifth line of the first paragraph has been: „falsam”; ibidem, on the expression „superiore anno”, in lines 10-11, he commented: „falsiss”.

Coll. 2. CALVIN, Jean (Calvinus):

Epistolae et responsa. Genevae, 1575. Petrus Santandreas. 2^o - Adams C 387; Ind. Aur. 130.138.

Note on the copy: There are extensive notes going into great detail in this volume. A comment by Dudith, on Petrus Martyr's undated letter to Calvin on p. 149, has a particular interest from a Hungarian aspect. On the text: „circa festum Paschae literas ad te, vir clarissime, dederam, sed adolescenti Hungaro, et quidem nobilissimo, qui non longe à Selestadio est interfectus” Dudith commented: „Franc. Balassi amic. meus sing.”

Provenance note: Andr. Duditij etc. Καψ βιζρά. Bene qui latuit, bene vixit.

Location: Lund UB.

Note on the copy: The description has been based on Walde. My efforts to trace this item have been unsuccessful. - Walde gave 1554 as the year of publication, which seems questionable to me. The BN dated this item to 1558, s. l., adding the note: „Au fol. G IV 20 on lit: Mauricius Steinmetz, mathematicum studiosus, haec explicabat Lipsiae, an. 1554.” This must have been the source of Walde's „Lipsiae, 1554”.

Pharisaismus vetus et novus L. Humfredi concio. Rupellae, 1585. Theophilus Regius. 8^o - Rep. Bibl. en France XVI. p. 51. Nr. 3.; Bibl. Gripenhielmiana Nr. 67.

Provenance note: Andr. Dudith. etc. Consrij Caes. etc.

D-2065.

Location: Lund UB.

Note on the copy: This has been one of Dudith’s most copiously annotated books.

Coll. 2. HUMPHREY, Laurence:

Pharisaismus vetus et novus: sive de fermento pharisaeorum et iesuitarum Laurentii Humfredi. Haerta, 1582. 8^o

Note on the copy: A number of marginal notes can be found in the book. - Haerta must be a false imprint. This work cannot be identified in catalogues and bibliographies as a separate edition. As a miscellaneous collection of works bound together, it has been listed by Pollard-Redgrave 13961 (1582, London, Henry Middleton, published twice in that year).

Possessors: 1. Dudith. 2. Dietrichstein.

D-557.

Location: Stockholm KB.

Note on the copy: Dietrichstein's bookplate has been pasted on top of Dudith's provenance note, but part of the letters can still be seen. The item has been copiously annotated up to the beginning of Book 5, p. 618. The marginal notes written in a brighter or darker red ink permit us to conclude that the book must have been read through at least twice.

ZIKZAEUS, Valentinus vide SZIKSZAI HELLOPAEUS Bálint

336 ZONARAS, Johannes:

Compendium historiarum in tres tomos distinctum. [Graece et Latine. Trad. Hieronymus Wolphius.] Basileae, 1557. Johannes Oporinus. 2^o - Adams Z 180; OSzK Z 16

Provenance note: Above the device on the title page, in red ink there is: Andr. Dudith. etc., within the device, in brown ink: MDLXI, below this, in brown ink: ANDR. DVDITII SBARD., again, below that, in brown ink: Andr. Duditij Sbardellati. etc. 1561.

Location: Uppsala UB.

Note on the copy: The first two volumes have been copiously annotated, while in the third volume, there are no marginal notes at all. The marginal notes had been written first in pencil, then were re-written in red ink, to be more clearly legible. On the text: „Ea sibi cibos paratos saepe ab urbanis latronibus eripi, iniquo animo ferens, ivaque et fame percita, puerum lactantem mactarum atque assum, partium uorauit, partim in aliud tempvs asseruauit,” in vol.1, p. 214, Dudith commented, in the margin: „1572 in aliquot Lithuaniae et Poloniae locis idem factum scimus.”

Coll. 2. NICETAS Choniates Acominatus

LXXXVII annorum historia ... Graece Latineque editum ... Hironymo Wolphio. Basileae, 1557. Johannes Oporinus. 2^o - VD 16 N 1449

Possessors: 1. Dudith. 2. ?.

Location: Gdansk UB.

Note on the copy: Jean Lertout had no printing press in Lyons, thus the place of publication in the imprint is false. Moeckli did not include this title in his list, but he listed several other publications printed by Lertout. In Durling's bibliography, Lyons as the place of publication is based on Walde.

Coll. 2. GEMMA (Jemma, Frisius), Cornelius:

De prodigiosa specie naturaque cometae ... anno 1577 ... Per D. Cornelium Frisium ... Antverpiae, 1578. Christophorus Plantinus. 8^o - VOET 1244; OSzK G 124
